How can a human pope be infallible?

I've always heard the pope is infallible. I find it hard to believe he never makes mistakes. If he's human, how can he be perfect?

Diane

Dear Diane,

We don't claim the pope is perfect.

From the Church's earliest centuries, Catholic Christians have acknowledged that Saint Peter and his successors, the bishops of Rome, have had a special role as teachers within the Church. But the way we speak of that role has developed over time. Likewise, Christians have long acknowledged that the Holy Spirit can and does preserve the Church from error in teaching about faith and morals. Yet exactly how this happens and the nature of the pope's role in the process were subjects of debate among Christians for centuries.

The Church achieved some resolution to the debate in 1870 at the First Vatican Council, which produced the document Pastor Aeternus, also known as the First Dogmatic Constitution on the Church of Christ. That document finally gave an official description of how a pope could exercise infallibility in the Church. That description remains in force today.

We Catholics believe the pope speaks infallibly when he acts as the pastor and teacher of all Christians and when, with the help of divine assistance, he defines a matter of faith or morals to be held by the universal Church. We believe the pope can exercise infallibility when he teaches, but only about faith and morals and only in union with the Church.
